when Orange Lodges in Australia sought to publically commemorate anniversaries of the Battle of the Boyne, a standard Irish Catholic response was to call for a hurling match. Initially the authorities were slow to realise the implications gatherings of muscular Irish Catholics armed with hurleys on this special day. Matters came to a head in Sydney and Melbourne in 1846. This paper will analyse those events and their effect on Australia’s social history.