Jeff Kildea is a lecturer, author and retired barrister with a PhD in history from the University of New South Wales. He has taught Irish and Australian history to undergraduates at UNSW and Sydney University’s Centre for Continuing Education and is currently Adjunct Senior Lecturer at the Global Irish Studies Centre at UNSW, where in summer session 2014 he will lecture into a new course ‘Resistance and Revolution in Modern Ireland’. He has written books and articles and presented papers both Australia and Ireland on early-twentieth-century Irish-Australian history. His books include Tearing the Fabric: Sectarianism in Australia 1910–1925 (Citadel Books, 2002), Anzacs and Ireland (UNSW Press, 2007) and Wartime Australians: Billy Hughes (Department of Veterans’ Affairs, 2008). He is currently researching a biography of Hugh Mahon and also leads 'Irish Anzacs'—a major research project at the GISC, which is funded by the Irish Government Emigrant Support Programme and investigates the participation of the Australian Irish in the Australian Imperial Force during World War I. His website jeffkildea.com includes some of his writings and a blog on interesting aspects of Irish-Australian history.
